He was returning from his farm, two miles north of town and Mrs. Wallace, who is a neighbor was coming with him. Mrs. Wallace saw the train coming first and told Mr. Matter but he felt he could cross the track in safety. The car almost crossed the tracks being hit in the rear and thrown to a ditch to one side of the right-of-way. The car, a Ford touring was totally wrecked, three of the four wheels being smashed.

A similar accident occurred at the same crossing five years ago when Will Morton of Maryville was killed, his son, Delbert and Will Wiseman were injured. They were coming to Maryville to attend the funeral of Mr. Morton's father-in-law. This accident occurred July 26, 1918.

9 KINDS OF WHEAT ON COLLEGE FARM

SAMPLES BEING TAKEN FOR NEXT YEAR'S EXPERIMENTS.

M. U. PROFESSOR IS HERE

Assisting Mr. Stanfield in Harvesting Wheat—Six Kinds of Clover Planted—Rotation Plan Used.

W. W. Stanfield, head of the College agriculture department, was busy today getting samples of the different varieties of wheat for labratory work next year. The samples were taken just as they come from the field, no selecting being made. They were taken from the nine varities of the winter wheat which was planted as a result of the crop rotation experiment of the college.

The following different varieties of wheat were planted: Kamrad, Deitz, Poole, Harvest Queen, Mediterranean, No 31, Michigan and the three strains of Fulcaster. It is planted in plots 20 feet by 228 feet. Two plots being assigned to each variety.

C. A. Helms, field professor of the University of Missouri, is assisting Mr. Stanfield in the work of harvesting the crops at the college. Mr. Helms said that the crop of wheat grown north of the College building was the best field of wheat he had ever seen. He also added that the variety test such as employed by Mr. Stanfield had absolutely demonstrated the failure of Kamred wheat in rich ground. He said that the soil such as in Missouri and Eastern Kansas requires wheat of a stiffer straw. The Kamred wheat is so flat on the College field that a large per cent of the crop will be lost on account of the lodge and the machine being unable to pick it up.

Mr. Stanfield said that the College in experiments were aiming to develop a grade of Kamred wehat which would have a stiffer straw and a superior yield. He said that the Kamred wheat grown last year from the College seed yielded 40 bushels to the acre and was not flat while the University seed of the Kamred variety, which was planted in another plot had lodged and the yield not as great.

Four men are working in the College field threshing besides Mr. Stanfield and Mr. Helms. There are about ten acres of wheat and three acres of barley. A record will be made of the yield per acre after the wheat is threshed.

Among this years wheat crop, clover was planted. There were six kinds of clover planted besides the special Grundy County sweet clover. A cutting will be made of the clover this fall if the weather conditions continue as the clover already has a good growth.

All of the College crops are grown under a definite four-year rotation plan. Corn was planted and next year followed by oats. Wheat was planted the next year and soy beans followed this. However this year clover has been added to this rotation. The system will be modified so that there will still be a four-year plan of the rotation.

Mr. Stanfield said that this rotation plan used by the College ahd been responsible for maintaining or increasing the fertility of the soil so that the wheat lodges badly on account of the abundance of plant food. There is also a considerable amount of rust of the wheat which is responsible for at least part of the lodging.

BALLOON IS FOUND FLOATING IN LAKE

BELIEVED THAT NAVY AIRMEN PERISHED IN RACE

AIRPLANES TO SEARCH

Dispatched From Selfridge Field This Afternoon—Balloon Seen Partly Submerged In Lake Erie

Washington, July 7—At the request of the navy department the army air service this afternoon ordered airplanes to set out from Selfridge Field, Mich., in an attempt to aid in the search of the missing navy balloonists whose balloon was found floating in Lake Erie.

Port Stanley, Ontario, July 7—The government boat, Elsie Doris, was steaming at noon today to a sector of Lake Erie, 25 miles southeast of here to the aid of a wrecked balloon sighted by the steamship Colonial, early today. Captain Basian of the Colonial, believed the wrecked balloon to be that of A-6698, the naval entry in the national balloon elmination race, which started from Indianapolis July 4 and piloted by Lieut. L. J. Roth and P. N. Null.

Captain Basian, when five miles off the wreckage sighted the bobbing balloon in the water. Circling the wreckage he found the bag partly inflated at the top as grim evidence of a tragedy of the air.

Convinced that the crew was lost the captain ordered his vessel to steam back to Port Stanley, where he informed government officials and a government boat was immediately dispatched to the scene.

If the half submerged wreckage proves to be the missing naval balloon two gallant American aviators probably have lost their lives after hours of hopeless drifting and frantic efforts to reach land.

NODAWAY PEOPLE MAY BE HEIRS

AND INHERIT PART OF A 500 MILLION ESTATE.

MEET IN K. C. YESTERDAY

More Than 120 Claimants to Springer Estate Meet Yesterday—Dates Back to 1042.

Ten or more residents of Nodaway County have a chance of inheriting a part of an estate said to be valued now at about 500 million dollars. These Nodaway Countains are not saying much about it now but are attempting to trace their genealogy and to prove ancestry to the Springer estate, the heirs of which held a meeting yesterday at the Hotel Baltimore at Kansas City. The following is the article from The Kansas City times:

The following is from today's Kansas City Times:

About 120 heirs to the estate of Charles Christopher Springer met at the Hotel Baltimore yesterday with L. P. Johnson, an heir and director of the Springer Heirs Corporation, to discuss the purchase of membership in the corporation, and to become acquainted with the plans for the filing of claims for the Springer estate. The estate is said to include 2,654 acres in and about Wilmington, Del., and in New Jersey and New York, and is valued at about 500 million dollars, according to Mr. Johnson.

The corporation was organized last March to reunite the scattered descendants of Springer, and to make a concerted effort to recover the land from certain persons, not named by Mr. Johnson, who have controlled the property and have taken the proceeds from the expiration of the leases held by different companies and persons. The first lease expired in 1838, and the last in 1915. It is claimed by Mr. Johnson that rents on this property have not been paid for nine years.

The genealogy and history of the Springer family have not yet been completed by the corporation's genealogist, Mrs. Mary Springer McMahon, who is in Philadelphia engaged in research.

According to Mr. Johnson, the name "Springer" originated in 1042 when a German baron was knighted. Having threatened the stability of the kingdom, the baron was arrested and imprisoned two years on no specific charge. He was then tried in court, but was not acquitted, and so was returned to prison.

A river ran by the high tower in which he was confined. In an attempt to make his escape he leaped from this tower into the river, but was recaptured. For this daring exploit he was knighted by the king and was given the name Springer.

Charles Christopher Springer, a titled descendant of the original Springer, came to America in 1658 from Stockholm, Sweden. When he returned to Sweden, after having made his fortune in America, he deposited his wealth in Swedish banks, where it has lain idle since. With the accumulation of more than two centuries' interest, the wealth now totals 80 million to 90 million dollars.

After the corporation has recovered its heritage in America, it will sue for the money in Sweden. No date has been set for the institution of legal proceedings in America, but the case will come to court in New Castle County, Delaware, before November.

LARGEST CIRCULATION IN NODAWAY COUNTY

Was Charged With Deserting His Bride

Conception Junction Young Man Was Arrested on Complaint of Wife.

(Conception Junction Courier)

The people of this community were greatly surprised when the report that Paul Walsh, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Walsh of this city, had been arrested upon a complaint charging him with deserting his bride, of a week reached here.

Paul left here on Saturday, June 16, for Kirwin, Kan., to meet and marry his childhood sweetheart, which he did on Monday, June 18, a report of which was published in the last issue of the Courier. After the marriage he wrote his parents that he and his wife would return home on the following Sunday, and Mrs. Walsh, like all good mothers, made great preparations to welcome the young couple.

The young man being anxious to return within the time limit granted him by the C. G. W. Ry. Co., by whom he has been employed for several years, told his wife they would have to leave at a certain time in order for him to be able to resume his duties, as was agreed upon at the time of his departure, but for some reason the young bride refused to accompany him, and in order to hold his position he was compelled to make the start alone. But upon his arrival in Atchison, to his great surprise, he was placed under arrest and returned to Phillips county, where a preliminary hearing was held, and he was bound over to appear at the September term of the district court.

Mr. and Mrs. John Walsh and son, Paul, are among Conception Junction's best citizens, Mr. Walsh being engaged in the produce business here, and their reputation for honesty, industry and good citizenship stands second to none in the community.

Paul, during the time he has been employed by the C. G. W. has, by his strict attention to his duties, won for himself the confidence of the company he serves and the large number of employes with whom he comes in contact.

Not one of our citizens believe him to have committed any dishonorable act and have faith that he will be exonerated when the case comes up for trial.

Miss Mildred Carlson, 413 West Thompson street, was the guest of Miss Helen M. Ferguson of Elmo, at a 6 o'clock dinner Friday.

How to Build Attic Aerials for Your Radio

ATTIC aerials are easy to construct, and when properly made, the results obtained with them are nearly as good as those obtained with outdoor aerials. Attic aerials should not be confused with loop aerials, as they have no directional effects. They also have an advantage over outdoor aerials in that they do not need a lightning switch.

The end-to-end type of this aerial consists of a number of lengths of No. 14 stranded copper wire, strung parallel to each other, and attached to the uprights at each end of the attic by means of ordinary aerial insulators. The total length of the wire used should not be less than 150, nor more than 200 ft., and the wires should be spaced about 1½ ft. apart. One end is left dead; the wires are then connected in series, as shown, and the other end is soldered to the lead-in wire, which is brought down to the instrument through a length of flexible loom.

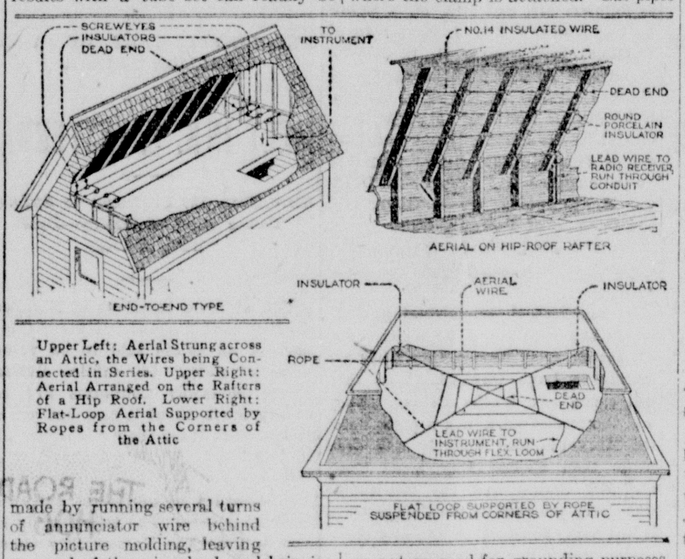
In attics where less space is available, such as those with hip roofs, the aerial can be strung along the rafters, as shown in the upper right-hand drawing. One length of No. 14 wire, 150 to 200 ft. long, is strung in four parallel rows as indicated, the wire being attached to the rafters by means of round porcelain insulators, which can be purchased at any electrical-supply store. One end is left dead, and the other is connected to the lead-in wire, as before.

The flat-loop aerial, shown in the lower drawing, is designed for small attics. Two lengths of rope are strung across the attic from corner to corner, and are tied together at the point where they cross. The aerial wire is attached to the ropes, as shown in the drawing, being tied firmly at every point where it touches the ropes. The inner end is the dead one, and the outer end is connected to the lead-in wire. The turns should be spaced about 1 ft. apart.

In apartments where there are no attics, an inside aerial that gives good results with a tube set can readily be made by running several turns of annunciator wire behind the picture molding, leaving one end of the wire dead, and bringing the other down to the receiving set.

With such an aerial an amateur has received stations 1,000 miles distant, using a two-step spider-coil receiving set.

To obtain the best results with any receiving set, just as much pains must be taken to secure a good ground as to construct the aerial. Number 14 wire should be used, and one end soldered to a water or radiator pipe. A clamp can also be used, the pipe, of course, being scraped where the clamp is attached. Gas pipes are not so good for grounding purposes, as they are often insulated from the ground by the meter. However, this can be remedied by shunting a wire around the latter.



Upper Left: Aerial Strung across an Attic, the Wires being Connected in Series. Upper Right: Aerial Arranged on the Rafters of a Hip Roof. Lower Right: Flat-Loop Aerial Supported by Ropes from the Corners of the Attic

Five thousand persons attended the grand celebration of the Fourth of July in Maryville. On arriving at the grounds the grove was densely packed, the lowest estimate of the number present being 5,000. The performance was opened with music by the Maryville Band, followed by prayer by Rev. J. T. Boyle. After prayer the Declaration of Independence was read by Mayor B. K. Davis. After dinner James Todd delivered a brief and well-timed address on the subject of our great anniversary, which was listened to attentively. Hon. M. G. Roseberry was presiding officer and toasts were responded to by the following: "Our Forefathers," by I. V. McMillan; "The Women of Our Country," James Todd; "The Pioneers of Northwest Missouri," L. The Commercial Club, recently organized in this city, is destined, we believe, to become an important factor in advancing the business interests of Maryville, judging from the keen interest which is being manifested by the officers and members. The president of the association, W. H. Hudson, has appointed an entertainment committee with power to act. They are Judge Janes, chairman; A. T. Wing, J. R. Brink, Nick Schumacher and R. S. Braniger. Another, the railroad committee, was also appointed as follows: Ed Orear, G. B. Holmes and John P. Price. The membership fee has been placed at the low sum of $1 with 25 cents monthly dues. The club met again last night and adopted constitution and by-laws.

The Seminary board met yesterday and elected the faculty for the ensuing year as follows: J. Jay Bryant, president; mental, political and physical science; Robert L. Golf Pointers

What is the best club to use when the ball lies in the sand?

Answered by
PHIL GAUDIN

Medalist, British open championship; Captain of British international golf team; member of that team for eight consecutive years. Winner of numerous foreign tournaments, including Manchester Gurdain trophy.

If the ball is sunk in the sand, use a niblick because it has a sharp blade and cuts through the sand easily. Tighten the grip as the club head approaches the ball on the down swing.

If the ball lies clean on the sand, an iron or jigger should be used, or even a spoon, if the lie and distance warrant. The sand may be slightly scraped by the sole of the clubs or the ball may be hit cleanly. When playing in sand always make sure that the feet are firmly planted. Otherwise, the power of the blow will be lessened. I always dig my heels into the sand until they are firmly set.

BABETTE

By JANE GORDON

(©, 1923, Western Newspaper Union.)

BABETTE lived in a little old house with a thatched roof; out upon this roof looked her bedroom window, a tiny window, swinging on its hinge. Below, in the garden with stone-laid paths, roses and sunflowers, and blue and pink and yellow flowers all bloomed riotously together.

Babette hummed gayly as she tied her white ruffled apron and smoothed her waving dark hair and breathed in the fresh fragrance of the countryside. She was very happy in the simplicity of her life, with grandfather below, waiting for his breakfast and ready with his timid, grateful morning kiss.

Babette had long been an orphan and her grandfather was all her kin. But there was Gene. No one else in all the world like Gene, with his beautiful dark eyes, his lovely, laughing lips—the tall slender length of him.

Every morning when she passed down to the garden, Babette would listen for the musical sound of Gene's yodeling. Gene drove a stout cart to town with vegetables and fruits fresh from the garden where he toiled, that he might make a second home for Babette—a home where she and he might begin life together. Grandfather would still live on at the little cottage, with old Nance to help him; for Gene was a jealous lover, and would share his wife with no needy relative.

Upon a certain morning Babette watched for Gene; his merry song came to her vibrant with new joyousness. With the discernment of love, Babette listened, her heart beating more rapidly, in instinctive fear. Gene's arms closed about her as he sprang from the cart, his handsome eyes glowing. "Beloved," he began breathlessly, "I have for you wonderful news. Listen: That man who has for days driven around the hills stopped this morning at my door. Far away he makes great pictures of people walking, and acting out stories on a theater screen. Wonderful are these pictures, Babette. I had hoped to take you to the big town where you might see them. But this is the news. The man would have me for a subject. A shepherd, who guards his sheep on the hills. And the money—if I am successful," Gene's triumphant laugh rang out. "Dear one, it would more than build the new home—would carry us both far away to see the world we have not known."

"But, Gene," she said, troubled, "you would have to go far away, alone—for a very long time, perhaps. And I—should be here."

So, after a time, he went away. Babette still sang about her tasks. The pink of her cheeks was a paler pink and her eyes often wore a misty cloud. But she wrote to Gene cheerfully, letters rejoicing in the success he so proudly wrote of. Then, Gene's letters ceased. He was very busy, she knew.

One silent year passed; then two. The lady who stayed among the hills because her lungs were weak showed to Babette papers which came to her regularly from the far away great cities and in the papers were beautiful pictures of Gene—Gene, in his acting parts.

When grandfather died, because, as Babette explained, "his years were so many," the invalid lady came down from the inn in the hills to be the girl's companion in her loneliness.

And in time, one of the city papers showed a fine picture of Gene—with that of a beautiful young woman whom he was going to marry. A lovely, lovely young woman who acted with him, the paper said. "How," Babette asked the invalid lady, "could Gene quite remember me, with her near by?" Then, suddenly, she gave a sharp cry. Following the news of the popular actor's engagement was the stunning news of an automobile accident, in which he was the unfortunate victim. The black headlines seemed to scream at Babette:

"Eugene Le'Bray, crippled in auto accident. Face also cut and bruised. Hurried to general hospital. His fiancee, Dulcie Dale, uninjured. Miraculous escape." Babette read no further. "Is it very far to that city where it is always summer?" she asked her new friend. "Well, no matter how far. I must go now—at once. There will be enough money to take me, maybe to care for Gene, too, when they will let me bring him back home. For you see, with his dear face all cut and sewed, they will no longer hire him—for his beauty. And if he is crippled, too, the lovely lady who must travel here and there to act her parts will not be able to give him proper care. I think," added Babette with shrewd intuition, "that perhaps she, too, will not want Gene any more. But if her love is true—then see—she shall come for him when I have nursed his pain away, here in the hills of his old home."

Gene lay on a cot across the stone path of Babette's garden. Months had passed and he was strong enough to stand without the help of his cane. But there was a twisted red line where his lips had curled so smilingly—his dark eyes were very grave and tender. "Babette," he said brokenly—his thin hand went out to her—"it is not just that I should come back to you thus, a wreck of what I was, but I left you, grieved you. Of a madness it seems to me now, always I must have loved you, Babette."

"One loves always," the girl replied. "Then you were but acting parts. This, Gene, is the real you."

Lee Murphy, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Murphy, was kicked by a horse Monday while out in the field polwing corn.

The tongue to the cultivator which Lee was using broke and when he went to go behind one of the horses, in some way the line touched the horse and he kicked Lee, with both feet, in the stomach. Lee was in a dangerous condition for a while, but it is thought that he will get alright soon.

PROPER PLANTING OF SHRUBS

Like Most Other Things, There Is a Right and a Wrong Way of Doing It.

When you transplant trees, shrubs, bushes, be sure that you cut them back sufficiently to permit them to absorb and take in nourishment quickly. Because shrubs and trees are delivered to you with long, frayed roots just as they are taken from the nursery is no reason why they should be planted in this condition. Cut them back about one-third of their length and cut sharp all bruised ends of the thicker roots.

Because most shrubbery is green, even in its flowering season, it is safe to use it in any green-leaved variety against most any home. Remember that nature disposes her flowers against trees and shrubs as a background. You seldom find them growing in beds alone.

Flowers planted in beds, displayed in curious shaped utensils, urns, pots and pans, scattered about a yard are unnatural. They are harsh and correspond to museum specimens. Flowers can best be planted as borders to shrubbery.

Don't forget that your backyard offers as many possibilities in home gardening as your front yard.

Arrange your planting plan to "plant out" objectionable things. Garages, telephone poles, alley, outhouses and other things can be made less offensive and many times "planted out" altogether through careful planning.

CITY PLANNER SAVES MONEY

Numerous Instances Where the Services of an Expert Brought "Dividends" to Community.

The city planner hopes and expects to save enough money for the city to repay it well for the effort and money spent, writes Harold Cary in Collier's Weekly. In one Florida city, for instance, the council planned a new city hall and was about to purchase a site when the new plan of the city was submitted. It called for the city hall, when needed, to be built in an entirely different place. The two sites were compared. The first was expensive, and just enough to build on. It was centrally located. The second, recommended by the expert, was less than one-half as costly and was perhaps twenty times as big. The building could be placed in a big park. Since it was on a traffic artery, near the center, the councilmen decided that the expert was right; the new site was cheaper, bigger, and actually more conveniently, if less obviously, located.

"City planning pays," says Mr. Nolen. "It provides certain indispensables, as streets, buildings, parks, and open spaces, which will be had sooner or later, plan or no plan. It provides pure water, sanitation, and better housing, directly reducing the cost of epidemics. Apart from this somewhat sordid line of reasoning, it provides a new and very real public welfare which business men and city officials can well understand."

It seems to me that what is meant by that is that the city planner aims to make the town better, so much better that we need not be ashamed of any part of it any more—that, instead of just liking it, we shall soon come to love it. When anyone comes to love a town, that is an asset, and when everyone does, the combined assets become well-nigh priceless.

The Story-and-a-Half House.

Often the story-and-a-half house solves the problem of obtaining a home at a moderate cost.

The bungalow makes an ideal home for those who enjoy the comfort and convenience which result from having all the rooms on one floor. But it is not necessarily the least expensive type of home to build. Its widespread plans often lead to costly foundations and costly roofs. When the same number of rooms are placed in two stories, the foundations and roof do not extend so widely, and the expense of building may be reduced correspondingly.

Between the bungalow and the full two-story house is the story-and-a-half house, which has the snug, low look and cozy interior effect of a bungalow, yet has the economical construction of a two-story house.

In the story-and-a-half house the space under the roof can be utilized for sleeping quarters, and very good bedrooms can be obtained through the use of large dormers and by increasing the pitch of the roof. By this means adequate ceiling height may be gained for the bedrooms in the second story at somewhat less cost than full two-story houses.

Citizens to Pay for Park.

Dayton, Ohio, has for the first time levied a special assessment to build a park, previous parks having been acquired generally by gift or bond issue.

Illinois County in First Place.

AT LEAST DID SOME GOOD

Bishop Could Not Feel That His Sermon Had Been Altogether Without Effect.

Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, of the Church of the Ascension, New York city, tells a story about a bishop friend of his who delivered a sermon at a lunatic asylum. The bishop was a bit doubtful as to how the audience of lunatics would receive him, but as he got along into his sermon, he was agreeably surprised. The congregation gave him the closest attention. In the third row there was a man who seemed particularly interested. His eyes never once left the face of the bishop. Thirty minutes went by with the congregation still attentive. Then forty minutes. The bishop, under the spell of his audience, so warmed to his subject that he forgot all about the time. Sixty minutes passed. The man in the third row looked hard at the speaker, and his lips began to move.

"Cut it out; cut it out; cut it out," he said rapidly, over and over again.

The bishop wound up quickly and sat down, feeling that all had not gone as well as he had been led to expect at the beginning of his sermon. A crowd gathered round, shaking his hand and congratulating him, much to his surprise. The superintendent of the institution told him what a wonderful sermon he had preached, what a wonderful help it had been to the inmates.

"Why, you saved at least one life," he went on. "You remember that man in the third row. Those were the first sane words he had uttered in twenty years."—From Everybody's Magazine.

HE'S RIGHT

Wifey—Can't we have a joint account?

Hubby—No, sir! I have no use for joints.

Taught "Stenog" to Spell.

Goaded to despair by the continual inaccuracies in spelling made by his stenographer, Mr. Gunnysack, in a moment of desperation, went out the other day and bought her an unabridged dictionary.

"Now," he said, according to the New York Sun, "there's no excuse for further mistakes."

Yesterday he dictated a letter to her before he went to lunch. "I want that ready when I return," he said.

When Mr. Gunnysack returned an hour and a half later he found the letter still in the machine and a perspiring stenographer poring over the pages of the dictionary.

"Sir, Gunnysack," she exclaimed, wearily, "I'm half-way through S and I haven't found that word psychoanalysis yet."

Muskrat's Costly Prank.

A million gallons of water intended for the use of West Chester, Pa., rushed into Chester creek when a bank gave way on the east side of a big impounding pond. One muskrat is charged with causing the break. An investigation disclosed the fact that the animal had dug a trench beside a 24-inch pipe intended for draining the pond. The water, rushing at high pressure through this, soon enlarged the opening until a big section of the embankment gave way and the pool was drained.

Indigestible Diet.

When surgeons operated on an inmate of the Kansas State hospital for epileptics they removed 27 spoons and several small pieces of wood believed to be matches. Some of the silverware was partly disintegrated by digestive fluids. The patient's mental condition was said to be responsible for his mania for devouring silverware.

Lightning Spared Child.

Lightning struck a home in Gretna, Fla., and wrecked a "kiddie koop" in which a three-year-old baby was sleeping, burned a hole in the floor near the "koop" but never roused the child from slumber. The parents were severely shocked and were surprised to find the child alive.

Hurt in Freakish Accident.

An employee of a Maine lumber mill had one eye completely knocked out and the other injured, when a large belt used in operating a saw broke in several pieces. One piece "flew" outside and struck the victim, who was in the yard, between the eyes.

Peculiar Fatality.

A young woman of Avenes, near Liege, Belgium, has been killed by her hair comb. She had climbed on her bed in order to hang up a picture, but lost her balance and fell back to the floor. The comb she wore in her hair pierced her skull, and death was instantaneous.

WINS FAME IN VIENNA

A girl never heard of in America, Emma Redell, whose home is in Washington, D. C., is causing a sensation on account of her beautiful voice. An American visiting in Vienna first learned of her when he was attracted by a crowd of people under a window charmed by a beautiful voice ringing out from above. Looking up her instructor, one of the greatest voice teachers in America, the American learned that she is considered a wonderful singer and that she is going to be the sensation of Vienna and Europe.

SAVAGE CUSTOMS IN HAWAII

Almost Unbelievable Atrocities Followed the Death of a Man the Islanders Ranked Highly.

Death was a catastrophe that was made the occasion of great demonstration among the Hawaiian people, even within the last century. In private families this varied in character from the head of the household down to the humblest member. When, however, a prominent person died, the ceremonies were barbarous in the extreme. A chief's immediate followers, as well as many of his serfs, shaved their heads or cut the hair short, which was a tremendous sacrifice, and they knocked out some of their front teeth. Often these devoted people tattooed their tongues somewhat in the same fashion as it was customary to do on other parts of the body. All this was done to keep alive the memory of the dead chief. It was also a custom to bury alive some of the retainers around the tomb.

When a very high rank chieftain died, men and women, old and young, priest and laity, acted like those possessed with devils. Property was wantonly destroyed, and dwellings fired merely to add to the confusion, while gambling, theft and murder were openly committed. No women, except the widows of the deceased, were exempt from the grossest violation, and in their state of mental intoxication, women made no effort to protect themselves.

ROOM OF GREWSOME MEMORY

Wholesale Murders Committed in Chamber in What Is Believed Oldest Inn in England.

The oldest inn in England is believed to be a certain hostelry at Colnbrook, Buckinghamshire. This place has a very black history, for here, many years ago, 60 murders were perpetrated by the landlord and his wife before the crimes were discovered!

In this gloomy abode there is, on the first floor, a large room known as the "Blue Room." Formerly it contained an innocent-looking bed in which quite a number of persons slept their last sleep. The part of the floor on which the bed rested was really a hinged trap-door fixed above the brewhouse's boiling vat.

Guests who were known to be wealthy always slept in the Blue room. When the inkeeper had made sure that the guest was asleep, the trap-door bolts were drawn, and the unfortunate man tumbled into the vat.

The last victim was Thomas Cole, a clothier, of Reading, who had three escapes before finally meeting his death. Once he was taken ill before reaching the inn, and so slept elsewhere; a second time he was in a hurry to get to London, and consequently drove straight on; while on another occasion when he stayed at the inn the Blue room was occupied by someone else. But at last his time came, and his body was found later in a brook.

First American Fire Engine.

The first fire engine in America was received in Boston January 27, 1679. It was a crude contrivance, to be drawn by men and operated by hand power. No great improvement was made in fire-fighting apparatus from ancient times until the Nineteenth century, when the steam fire engine was invented. Fire engines are said to have been invented by Ctesibius in the year 250 B. C. A hero of Alexandria describes those ancient "siphons used in conflagrations." The mechanism consisted of two cylinders and pistons connected by a reciprocating beam which raised and lowered the pistons alternately, and this, with the aid of valves opening only toward the jet, projected the water from it, but not in a continuous stream, as the pressure ceased at each alternation of the stroke.

Omaha Indians Adopt Chicago Girl

© Underwood & Underwood.

Sympathy for the Indian race and her determination to aid her country in its efforts to advance the status of the red man has brought signal honors to a young white girl of Chicago, Marion Eleanor Gridley, from representatives of the various Indian tribes who gathered in a meeting of the Grand Council Fire of American Indians. Miss Gridley, who is just sixteen, was adopted into the Blackbird Clan of the Omaha tribe and given the name of Me-um-be-three, meaning "Little Moonbeam." Miss Gridley has written many strikingly beautiful poems about the Indians; and much of the beadwork seen on her costume is her own work. She is shown above with Princess Little Eagle.

LEE STRICKLER.

Death swings it's reaper far and near,
Cutting down the tare; the thorn; the rose,
Leaving sorrow in it's wake, and fear
To those who play life's game, and lose.

Death called a splendid man
Out from our ranks today,
A man who loaned a willing hand,
To help others along life's way.

Lee, whom we all loved so well,
Was called by the reaper, death,
Bidding us a silent farewell,
As he took his last short breath.

We'll miss his help, his smile,
And the good he helped us do,
But do we know the hour, the while,
That I may pass this way—and you?

The consolation that we have,
In the life that God has given,
Is to live by helping others live,
So we all may meet in Heaven.
